Challenges

Ageing portfolio needs a lot of attention

Dealing with legacy applications that are rigid and difficult to change in a complex application landscape with various technologies requires a lot of attention. The presence of shadow IT further increases maintenance complexity. Often a lack of tools to effectively monitor, manage, and support the IT environments leads to even more inefficiencies.

IT budgets under pressure

Businesses are facing macro-economic challenges that create cost pressures, further intensified by frequent budget overruns and concerns about the value for money. Additionally, the absence of continuous improvement mindset results in unnecessarily high costs for maintaining legacy applications, impacting overall efficiency and cost-effectiveness.

High business expectations

The service quality and speed do not align with business expectations. The IT department faces challenges in keeping up with increasing business demand and experiences a shortage of IT skills and talent attraction.
